NEW ACADEMIC PROGRAM: BUSINESS ANALYTICS & INFO SYSTEMS AT U. OF IOWA

Big data is now big business and big money, as companies work to translate vast amounts of data into knowledge about their customers and their people, the things they make and how they make it.

So big that the Department of Labor projects 25 percent growth in the need for workers trained in analytics through 2018. The University of Iowa's Tippie College of Business hopes to help meet that demand by establishing one of the first undergraduate business school majors to address big data.

The major— Business Analytics and Information Systems(BAIS)—will teach students to manage vast amounts of data, teasing out what secrets it holds, and then use that information to strengthen their business. Business Analytics and Information Systems (BAIS) is one of six Undergraduate Business Majors offered by the Tippie College of Business, which is known for the strength of its academic departments and the community built by its students, faculty, and staff. U.S.News & World Report ranks Iowa's undergraduate business program in the top 25 public universities nationwide.

This fall Northwestern Michigan College will welcome students from more than 18 different countries to its campus. As the College strives to prepare graduates to be successful in a global economy and society, President Timothy Nelson has placed renewed importance on welcoming more international students.

"Within the next five years, we'd like to see 5% of our student population be international," says Nelson. "The world has changed significantly in the last decade. Now, more than ever, it is essential that we offer students the opportunity to become globally competent. NMC has a unique opportunity to offer an excellent education to international students while providing local students with learning experiences alongside their international peers."

Classes begin August 24 at Northwestern Michigan College. Students from Nigeria, Pakistan, Brazil, India, Jamaica, Afghanistan, Ghana, Peru, France, United Kingdom, Hong Kong, Mali, Portugal, Zambia, Russia, Syria, Denmark and China, will begin their educational journey at NMC.

Applications are now being accepted for the Spring 2014 semester which begins in January.
